The process of making gas under the Lowe system is too well known to require a description, suffice it to say in that connection that the gas made by this process is perfectly clean and purand no inconvenience is attached to its use by reason of smoke or oil. The plant now being erected has a capacity of 100,000 cubic feet a day and s so arranged that it can readily and with but small cost be increased to ten or twenty times that capacity. The oil tanks will hold six carloads of oil and every precaution has been taken to render it as near impossible as can be for the company to fail in its delivery of gas after the works are in operation.
